*and any other information we found interesting,
funny or a need to share!*

Curate's Musings

To say I am not particularly interested in football is an understatement. However, I did sit up and take notice, a few mornings ago, when I heard the female executive of a Premier League football club being interviewed on the radio. The subject, of course, was when and how the clubs might begin to play again, and in front of live audiences. There had been a top-level meeting and decisions had to be made. This lady said she had gone to the meeting having decided how they should proceed. But she had heard what other club managers had to say and she had changed her mind. Imagine that!

How often do we hear a public figure – a politician, especially – acknowledge that he or she, having heard other opinions, weighed up new arguments, heard about different experiences, has changed their mind? On the rare occasions it happens, they may well be castigated. They've 'done a u-turn' – and that's automatically deemed to be blame-worthy.

I want to suggest we all need to be much more open to the possibility of changing our minds – and of being gracious to others who change theirs. In the last few months, every day we've been inundated with new data, new statistics, new interpretations, corrections, evaluations. Who among us can assess all this information instantly and reach the correct decision every time? Having come to an opinion, it may be we need to change our mind.

Thinking over a longer period than just the past few months, which of us would say we have the same opinions as we did ten years ago? – or when we were teenagers? It's only to be expected that our views change as our experience enlarges and our circumstances alter.

It's great to appreciate and value what we've got – whether it's a comfortable home, lovely countryside, decent education and well-thought-out values in life.

'For the company of friends, for food on the table, for the one I love, for the blessings of life: God, thank you.'

And it's even better consciously to say 'thank you' for them!

*'Count your blessings, name them one by one,
and it will surprise you what the Lord has done.'*

St Paul suggested to the Christians in Philippi that they could actually calm their worries by saying 'thank you': 'Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything with prayer and thanksgiving let your requests be known to God.'

And the peace of God will guard your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.'

It's great, too, to move on and grow from our beginnings, in our attitudes and sympathies and understanding. Those among us fortunate to have children or grandchildren will occasionally admit we learn a great deal from them – not only about modern technology but also about attitudes to minorities, concerns for the future of the earth, viewpoints on sex equality and mental health, and so on.

These last months have opened many of us to new ways of doing things – even if it's only allowing ourselves to be helped to do things we've always done for ourselves. And the next months will be challenging too, as we try to keep workplaces, shops and entertainment venues hygienically safe; even our church buildings may have to be run somewhat differently, and church services may look and feel a little unfamiliar. As we grow, we have to be open to change our minds about matters we may have thought were settled and changeless for ever.

George Craig, a Methodist preacher, tells a story about having taken his son on his first visit to a beach. There was a tediously long walk from the car park, and his son, being thrilled with his new bucket and spade, was forever stopping to dig in little patches of sand on the rather dirty path. He may well have been happy to spend all day there, never reaching the actual beach. George Craig observed:

'Many of us who have embarked on the journey of faith have very similar experiences. I'm sure I'm not the only person who has been reluctant to accept that the experience of God that I've been comfortable with for years may not be the whole story..... And that's a pity, because God does not call us to a life spent sitting comfortably where we first met him.'

He constantly calls us on to bigger and better things. He always has more for us to discover about him.'

The future might be different from how we imagined it was going to be, and we may have to change our minds about all sorts of things. George Craig's son's face, when he eventually saw the real beach 'was a picture: delight but also sheer awe that anything so good could be so vast. And that same sense of delight and awe can be ours, if we're willing to trust God's promise that, however good we may think it is where we are, it's a lot better up ahead.'

*Lord, we pray for the gift of faith that will draw us on, trusting in your promise that the best is yet to come.
Amen.*

IMPORTANT NOTICE

I wanted to make people aware.... guide dogs haven't been trained in social distancing and queuing to get in a shop. If you see a guide dog heading straight for the shop door and not joining the queue, that is what they have been trained to do. They're not being rude or intentionally queue jumping. Also, if you see them walking down the street, remember, they haven't been trained to social distance, so it is up to us, the sighted people, to give them the space. Hope that helps my many guide dog owner friends in these really difficult and challenging times.

For those suffering domestic abuse, isolation will be a terrifying prospect and significantly increase the risk of harm.

Recent events in the United States of America have once again drawn public attention to the ongoing evil of white supremacy. Systemic racism continues to cause incalculable harm across the world. Our hearts weep for the suffering caused – for those who have lost their lives, those who have experienced persecution, those who live in fear. God's justice and love for all creation demands that this evil is properly confronted and tackled. Let us be clear: racism is an affront to God. It is born out of ignorance, and must be eradicated. We all bear the responsibility and must play our part to eliminate this scourge on humanity.

As Dr Martin Luther King Jr said, "In a real sense, we are all caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Therefore, injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." We pray that God's abounding wisdom, compassion and love will guide leaders across the world to forge a better society.
